"The Japanese officially list 1,676 organizations or facilities for philanthropic and social welfare work in Taiwan. These include semi-official organizations such as 'Improvement of Village' associations, pawnshops, public markets, and others which under goverment supervison perform the work which would be financed elsewhere either through the government budget directly or through spontaneous private charity. There is less need for such organizations in a social system which is built on family units in which the individuals share and share alike."
